The "Notes & Questions" are not very helpful. The author should have thought about his audience more (law students). The author poses questions about topics in early chapters of the book, when those topics haven't even been taught yet (hide the ball). To make it worse, the author doesn't answer the questions posed in the relevant note. The author, instead, provides a link to a case (so be prepared to have your laptop/internet/westlaw handy when reading). Free information available on the Internet provides more value than this scam of a "textbook."
