Just so you know where I'm coming from...I grew up in a fairly strict Catholic family; you know, no-meat Friday, confession on Saturday, church on Sunday, piss and moan about how long and boring the mass was, what kind of ridiculous outfit the fat lady in front of us was wearing, how loud and off-key the drunk guy in back of us was singing; you know, typical Catholic stuff. As well, I did the altar boy thing for several years back in the early 60's. Heck, when I was a kid I had aspirations of being a priest when I grew up, that is until the hormones kicked in around age 13. However, all throughout my childhood I questioned EVERYTHING, especially about religion. Things just didn't add up in the 'makes sense' and 'fairness' columns and I was always frustrated with the evasive, non-answer 'take-it-on-faith' explanations I was offered. Of course, back in those darker days, there was no easy access to information like we have today. You just had to trust the authorities like parents and priests. A HUGE part of that trust implied that you NEVER questioned what they said. I remember we did have a Bible in our home but it was merely for decorative purposes. Oh, I may have attempted to read it a time or two, but try as I might, my child's brain simply couldn't make it past the first page or so. It might as well have been written in another language. Fast forward to today. I'm on the downhill side of 60 years old, rapidly approaching 61. I survived the Catholic upbringing up to the age of 20, did all the 'soul' and 'correct denomination' searching up to age 40, and even went through a period of time where I was 'spiritual but not religious'. Now, I'm just flat out atheist. The truth really DOES set you free!
