The saddest thing about this book is that it wasn't written twenty years ago with a volume one, two and three. It should be required reading for every young lady by the time she reaches 15. What the men and happily married women who've written negative reviews don't seem to grasp is that the majority of men (I didn't say all) operating in the dating pool are seriously up to no good.

Unfortunately for us, and very fortunately for them, the women they encounter have been fed with so much male driven media misinformation that we are merely sheep led to the slaughter. I am a smart, well educated, woman with my own life and all my years of dating, simply searching for my other half have been filled with the men Baje describes in her book. Most men consider me a 9 or 10 on the scale for both looks and intelligence, especially since I went to UC Berkeley, but that never stopped them for exclusively trying to use me for sex. I'm talking about men from A list celebrities and multi millionaire fund managers down to your average every day Joe Some walking through the grocery store. All of them. I had to become a prude in order not to be turned out as a whore. For years I had a problem with the word "gold digger" and realized it was a male dominated term used to make sure men never had to lift a finger to provide for the women they date or merely sleep with. But they sure do want that sex and will do ANYTHING and tell any lie to get it. How can anyone be mad or disappointed because Baje Fletcher, the author, was smart and ambitious enough to not only figure out how to even the playing field but share that information with the world?When you break all this terminology and dating down by sexes and our traditional roles it makes so much sense.
